Two men named McLin and Denis were among the disreputable gents employed in Flerida in 876-7 to transact the frauds by which the vote of that State was ransferred from Tilden to Hayes. These men have by some agencies been induced to confess the part Mr. Money, of Mississippi, from which they took in the election fraud of that period. What those agencies were is not at present clear. Their own position that it arises from a sudden awakening of conscience on their part may fairly be dismissed. Another cause assigned is that they have been promised immunity by the present Government of the States for various offences for which they are under indictmentoffences of the type familiar to all embezzlement, false issue of scrip, has certainly created a considerable North. flutter among politicians there; in with the administration.

This was he programme definitely arranged before the election came off, and faithfully carried out afterward. Under the organization as it existed there was no possibility for the State to be counted for Tilden. When recognized the better for the wellsome suspicion was created, through Barlow's influence over Cargill, as to the nerve and fortitude of that gentleman, the Republicans, made desperate, proposed to take the canvassing out of the hands of the Board and give it to Stearns. The hazards to hold the State, and they did it by what must now be conthey were playing only nerved them

There is certainly nothing in this which is new to us or will be new to their memories reach back about a year and a half. The matter may have been put in form better adapted for use in a court of justice, but substantially all this was known to all men interested in politics before Hayes was inaugurated. Politicians, however, are much exercised about it all. Conkling, Butler, Tilden are said to be holding interviews with men who profess to know all about it. On the other hand, men who have reputation or position to lose, whether Republican or Democrat, are careful not to handle the matter. It seems mainly interesting to those who are most rabidly opposed to the President, and to those who are resolved by fair means or foul to bring about the re-nomination of Tilden in 1880. We belong to neither of these classes. We look upon Mr. Hayes as somewhat better, or rather as not quite so bad who are attacking him, and we of the South and West that Mr. Tilden is not the man for the next Democratic nomination. No one really believes that Mr. Hayes will cease to be President de facto till the next Presidential election is over: The longer-headed Radicals want

In anticipation of this mode of conducting the campaign, some of the Southern members in the House have set themselves to the task of investigating the figures which show the comparative amounts that have been asked for by Northern and Southern States respectively in the way of appropriations from the publie treasury. We have before us a good speech to this purpose delivered in the House on April 24th by which we propose to extract a few figures.
